

From an AI nobody trusted to one they act on.

Momentum's built-in AI was a feature the company sold but users avoided. 40% touched it less than once a week. After the redesign, adoption crossed 70% in the first quarter, client onboarding conversion rose 60%, and acceptance of AI suggestions rose 80%.

The shift came from three changes: giving the AI the client's actual context, replacing the blank prompt box with a guided builder that cut prompt attempts from three to one, and embedding the AI inside the work instead of parking it in a separate tab.
